Several days later, the customer's bank issued a charge-back for the bill, stating that the customer called the bank and stated his card had been used fraudulently. The bank was therefore charging IHOP for the $400 charge. According to Mr. Jenkins, the customer, Mr. Clay, actually called IHOP back and confirmed that he made the purchase, and that the entire charge was his. The complainant stated that this is not the first time a party with the last name "Wilson" has done this in the area, as a nearly identical exchange was done recently at another store in the region by a party with the last name "Wilson." Police did not speak with Mr. Wilson or the waitress. Complainant asked for a report to be written.
